

DESERTED WIFE TRAILS HUSBAND FOR YEARS AND WINS DIVORCE

Takes Room in House Where He Is Living With Another Woman.

How a wronged wife trailed her erring husband around the country and lived in the same house in Hoboken where he was staying with "the other woman" was revealed today, when the final papers were signed by Judge Jaycox of the New York Supreme Court giving her a divorce absolute, with alimony and permission to resume her maiden name.

Mrs. John A. Wick, prior to her marriage in June, 1905, was Miss Cecelia Reeper of No. 728 Decatur Street, Brooklyn. Her husband was a traveling salesman. They settled down in West Hoboken, where they lived for eight years and where two little girls were born. Then Wick disappeared, and Mrs. Wick, leaving the children with her parents in Brooklyn, started to find him. She trailed him through Washington, Baltimore, St. Louis and Detroit, and after two and a half years found him living in the Harmonia Hotel, No. 112 Hudson Street, Hoboken, with another woman and a child.

Wick again disappeared, but after three months she again located him, this time living in a fashionable boarding house in the upper section of Hudson Street, Hoboken.

Disguising herself in an elaborate manner she secured a room in the house and discovered that the other woman with whom her husband was living as man and wife, was Amy Reeper of West Hoboken. They had one child. She then came acquainted with the second Mrs. Wick and gained all the evidence she required as to the infidelity of her husband.

Several times she met him on the stairs and spoke casually to him. He did not recognize her and she herself served the papers on him as he was boarding a trolley car for Brooklyn.

The evidence she had secured was so complete that her decree was granted as a matter of course. She obtained the custody of the children and he was ordered to pay her alimony and the costs of the court.

These Suits will last through the summer and fall, too, for they are made of a quality of serge that is guaranteed fast blue and which "wears like iron."

Some of the suits are form-fitting, with plain or patch pockets. Other styles are loose and a little more roomy. All are cut strictly up-to-the-second in every respect. Many of the coats are skeleton lined, for hot weather, while others are full, half or quarter lined with mohair, and some with silk.

If you're looking for a smart, stylish suit for summer, at a price that is as low as it can possibly be figured without the sacrifice of the essential qualities of merit, here is your opportunity.
